Autumn 2024

Become an examiner

Apply to mark GCSE and A-level exams with AQA

We're looking for teachers to join our community of 35,000 examiners who mark our exams – over ten million of them each year.

"Being an examiner has been central to my understanding of how best to teach the curriculum to ensure our students achieve the best outcomes. The quality of training and feedback received from AQA has been instrumental in understanding the mark scheme and developing subject expertise."

Our autumn term training

Things are slightly different this autumn – we've launched 'Preparing for 2025' and 'NEA Planning' courses to replace our 'Feedback on' training.

We'll identify areas for improvement, give you a greater understanding of how students can move through the levels and discuss teaching and learning activities.

What will 'Preparing for 2025' sessions cover?

- Student responses – low and high
- Characteristics of higher-level responses
- Teaching and learning activities

What will 'NEA planning' sessions cover?

- NEA brief/requirements and the mark scheme
- Advice on delivering and assessing the NEA
- Extracts from student NEA projects
- Teaching and learning activities
- Dos and don'ts

AoC SEND Conference – 11 December

We developed the Unit Award Scheme (UAS) to help GCSE students of all abilities flourish and reengage with their learning journey. Since its launch in 1984, it's given thousands of students knowledge, skills and a certificate in a topic they're genuinely interested in.

Subject areas range from conservation or animal care to sign language and sports.

Unit Award Scheme: Celebrating every success

The Unit Award Scheme (UAS) is about celebrating every success and has been inspiring students and building their confidence since 1984. An AQA developed and owned product, UAS was designed to help students flourish and reengage with their learning journey.

“ The learner benefits are significant. For example, we have seen a dramatic rise in attendance, engagement in lessons, improved behaviour, and progress. The students are so proud of themselves for completing the units. When the awards arrive, their faces say it all. ”

Jo Brophy

Customer feedback on our events

Don't just take our word for it...

Obviously, we think our training is top class, but here's what teachers who've done our courses say:

- "Really clear explanations of the common misconceptions and the ways in which students could be successful."
- "Working examples of the practical elements of the NEA were great."
- "I appreciated the thorough run through of the AOs."
- "Clear instructions and guidance, very responsive trainer. Ability to engage live... just what I needed."
- "You can never have too many teaching strategy ideas."
- "Talking through examiner feedback and discussing examples was really helpful."
- "Advice around looking for the command words in the specification – and how to approach 9-mark questions – was invaluable."

EPQ and Projects

Our Project qualifications are aimed at A-level students. They give them the freedom to study topics they're interested in, that aren't related to their studies. The skills they gain help prepare for university and the workplace.

FAQs

What types of training do you offer?

We provide both in-school and online training. Find out more about each type here:

In-school training: aqa.org.uk/professional-development/face-to-face-training/in-school

Online training: aqa.org.uk/professional-development/online-training

We also offer some face-to-face training in the form of EPQ courses.

Who are your courses aimed at?

Our courses are aimed at a variety of different needs and levels – from teachers new to teaching, or to AQA, to experienced teachers who want to top up their teaching knowledge, acquire new skills or gain insights into a recent exam series.

What methods of delivery are used?

We use a range of methods, from Microsoft Teams, eLearning, face-to-face or INSET online (our online training platform). Our team thinks carefully about the outcomes needed and what will suit our customers best.

How long does each course last?

The length of our training courses depends on the programme and format. The new 'Preparing' courses will be 75 minutes long, but eLearning modules take different times to complete. Training is delivered by subject experts, and the delivery format is tailored to communicate the course subject in the most effective way. All our events are recorded for training and monitoring purposes.

In-school training lasts for a half (approx 2.5 hours), or full (approx 5 hours) day – depending on your needs. Training sessions are a re-run of our national courses, delivered for a group of teachers, leadership team or department. Our trainers come to you and will build in time to answer questions or discuss specific content with you. These courses can be done online or face-to-face.

To request our in-school catalogue of training courses, please email: inschoolcpd@aqa.org.uk. We'll also send you a booking form and pricing details.

What training materials are provided?

After each course, materials are uploaded onto our secure website, Centre Services, so you can access or download them whenever you need to.

How much does AQA's training cost?

Much of our training is free, but some is chargeable. Check each training course page for details or refer to our in-school catalogue.

What preparation should I do?

Visit aqa.org.uk/CPD and look at our further information on online training and the online training quick-start guide.

For in-school training, preparation is dependent on the course you've selected and if there is any pre-work, our trainer will get in touch with you in advance.
