Section B – Extract Question

Read the extract below and answer question 4 that follows.

Extract 1

The House of Lords needs reforming, but abolishing it is not the answer.

In the past year, the House of Lords has made almost 2,300 changes to improve legislation. Apart from daily oral questions, peers have tabled more than 8,000 written questions and taken part in more than 160 debates. Well over 300 peers have been active members of select committees. I am opposed to “passengers” in the Lords who make no or very little contribution. However, they are a minority.

Those who argue for the abolition of the second chamber need to say how this work would be done. When a government has a big majority, having a second chamber to ensure legislation does not slip through without proper debate and analysis is absolutely essential.

The Lords has agreed to take action to reduce numbers. However, the resignation honours list beckons. It is at this point that prime ministers are tempted to reward rather than ask what contribution a person under consideration can make.

Extract 2

This broken House of Lords doesn’t need reform. It needs scrapping.

One in nine peers, between 2017 and 2018, did not participate in any House of Lords business: yet one of these still claimed £25,000.

Some will say that the House of Lords provides an invaluable function. But here is an institution beyond reform. It has been stuffed full of lobbyists, party donors, ex-party staffers and well-connected businesspeople. The Lords is not brimming with specialists and experts.

Its existence is an affront to democracy. The alternative is to replace it with an elected chamber. However, this is fraught with problems. Instead, we should look at a unicameral system.
