A painting showing a meeting in support of the Tolpuddle Martyrs in London on 21 April 1834. The crowd then marched to Parliament to present a petition for the Martyrs' release.

This painting was presented to Thomas Wakley, MP, who was a leading campaigner on behalf of the Tolpuddle Martyrs. Wakley was influenced by radical reformers. He also supported the repeal of the Corn Laws and the abolition² of slavery.

The painting shows a large open space where thousands of people are standing, waving their arms either side of a road. A group of about forty people, some in top hats and carrying long sticks, march down the road. They are led by two men on horseback. In the background, there is a mansion and a town.
