SECTION A

Answer Question 01.

EXTRACT A

The expansion of the British Empire was fuelled by the Victorians' love of adventure and a desire for new knowledge. The interior of Africa held the most enticing mysteries left in the world. The public at home shared the thrill of discovery of the man on 5 the spot. The Victorians loved a hero and imperial explorers and quarrelsome scientists filled this role.
 These men wrote long, and often dramatic, accounts of their experiences for their public and government at home to demonstrate the 10 possibilities of these 'new' regions for the Empire.
 The possibilities seemed unlimited, as the new Victorian technology, the steamship, the telegraph and, above all, the railway, promised for the first time the real opening up of the interior of Africa to 15 these explorers, and by extension to Britain. As a result of the explorers' discoveries, men began to 'think big' and planning was on a continent-wide scale for Britain's expanded rule.
