From a US Population Bulletin on 1980, published by a commercial non-profit organisation, December 1982. This academic organisation specialised in compiling statistics on the health and structure of populations.

Blacks numbered 11.7% of the total population in 1980, with 85% residing in urban areas compared to 71% of whites. Some suburbanization is occurring among blacks but the majority remain segregated in cities. In the 1970s, more blacks moved into the South than moved out in a reversal of the historic pattern. Blacks have shared the baby boom but teenage and out-of-wedlock fertility, as well as overall fertility, remain much higher than for whites. Black infant mortality is still double that of whites and life expectancy is 6 years shorter. Divorce and separation have risen faster for blacks than whites. Many of these gaps are related to blacks' continuing socio-economic disadvantages: average family income is 56% that of whites; the poverty rate is 3.5 times higher; unemployment is twice as high. Occupational status has improved for blacks and their educational attainment is now close to that of whites, but these gains may be slowed and income differentials unimproved if the current administration's reversal of socio-economic policy remains unchanged.
